FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT.

Circular No. 2097. -- Dep. 604, dated 23rd January 1908.

To—The Deputy Commissioners, Treasury Department, of all Districts and the Officer in charge, State Huzur Treasury, Bangalore.

As there appears to be some misconception as to the period for which Revenue, Judicial and Personal Deposits should be retained in the Deposit Registers, and when they should be credited to Government, under Article 255 of the Civil Account Code, the undersigned has the honor to issue the following instructions which are merely explanatory of Article 255 of the Code. This office Circular No. 2826—542, dated 20th November 1905, which has apparently given rise to the misconception owing to its being not quite explicit will no longer be quoted.

(1. All deposits will lapse at the close of the first, the second or the third account year following the year of deposit. In no case may they be retained in the Deposit Registers for more than three account years subsequent to the year of deposit.

2. In the case of deposits exceeding one rupee—

(a) If they are partly repaid in the year of deposit, and the balance is thereby reduced to a rupee or less, the balance will lapse at the close of the following year, i.e., the first account year following the year of deposit.

(b) If the balance after repayment or repayments be reduced to a rupee or less in the first account year following the year of deposit, the balance will lapse at the close of the succeeding year, i.e., the 2nd account year following the year of deposit.

(c) In all other cases in which either no repayment is made or the balance after repayment exceeds one rupee, the deposits or the balances of deposits, as the case may be, will lapse at the close of the 3rd account year following the year of deposit.

3. In the case of deposits not exceeding one rupee they will lapse at the close of the first or the second account year following the year of deposit as detailed below. In no case will these deposits be retained in the Deposit Registers for the third account year following the year of deposit:—

(a) If no repayment be made in the year of deposit and also in the year immediately following, the amount will lapse at the close of the latter year.

(b) If a repayment be made in the year of deposit the balance will lapse at the close of the year following the year of deposit irrespective of a repayment being made in the latter year or not.

(c) If no repayment be made in the year of deposit, and one is made in the year immediately following, the balance will lapse at the close of the account year following the latter, i.e., at the close of the second account year following the year of deposit, irrespective of a repayment being made in that year or not.
